GRYBKASKAS, Saulius, PhD, is senior research fellow and head of Twentieth Century History Department at the Lithuanian Institute of History. Grybkaskas has 20 years' experience of research in Soviet history, focusing on national conflicts in the centralized command economy and the Soviet multi-national state. His PhD dissertation (defended in 2007) received an honourable mention for Lithuania's prize for best dissertation of the year. His PhD research resulted in a book "Sovietinė nomenklatūra ir pramonės valdymas Lietuvoje 1965-1985 metais" (Vilnius, 2011, Soviet Nomenklatura and Management of Industry in Soviet Lithuania, 1965-1985). The monograph discusses the management of Soviet industry, analysing conflicts over ideology and power among groups with an identity defined technologically (engineers) or ideologically (party leaders, KGB informers). He has continued to work on centre-periphery issues within the Soviet empire as a part of a long term project on the Second Secretaries of communist parties in the Soviet republics, who were appointed by the Kremlin in order to carry out Moscow's will at the periphery. A book resulting from the project – "Sovietinis generalgubernatorius": Komunistų partijos antrieji sekretoriai Sovietų Sąjungos respublikose" (Soviet "Governors General": Communist Party's Second Secretaries in the Soviet Republics) – was published in 2016 in Lithuanian. It is forthcoming in English and Latvian. Currently Grybkaskas is involved in the research project "Engineers in Soviet Lithuania: Socialization, Professional Education, Activity and Ideology".
